

Creative Student Entrepreneur Interview Series: Dylan Obroch

Video

Self Employment in the Arts

Org/Publisher Website

Topic Marketing | Planning

Location

(Workshop

Only)

Occurance

(Workshop

Only)

Published

Date

(Publications Sunday, 27 December 2020

Only)

How can college students start making money with their creative skills while in college? In this interview series, we sit down with a variety of college students who are monetizing their creative skills while in college. Visual, performing, and media art majors share with us how they got started, tips for balancing school and professional work, and other strategies to help you kick-start your creative career while in school.

Description

Today's guest is Dylan Obrochta, a senior Theatre and Musical Theatre double major at North Central College in Naperville, Illinois. He is represented by Gray Talent Group. Some of his notable credits while in college include Chicago Shakespeare Theater and Chicago Fire.

Interviewing Dylan is SEA's student intern, Hope Jirsa. Hope is a senior Marketing Major at North Central College with a strong background in music.

For more resources and videos focused on helping emerging creatives succeed, visit www.selfemploymentinthearts.com.

Fee required to access?

No

Access: Link to Content

Speakers